REMINISCENCES.

I am wafted back in fancy
To those darling boyhood days,
When our pulses leaped ecstatic
Like the swell of martial lays.

Oh, the fullness then of living!
Oh, the joy that flushed our hearts
When I think 'tis gone forever,
Then a tear unbidden starts.

But the old world has a fashion
Of dispensing frowns to-day,
While it sends a smile to-morrow
To enchant their gloom away.

I recall the lazy languor
As we lay beneath the trees,
And reviewed the swirling waters
As they wandered to the seas.

Ah, what splendid dreams of conquest
Floated through our fancy there!
How we brushed aside each sorrow!
How we banished every care!

Not a note discordant sounded
In the symphony of life;
Not the tremolo of sadness
The fortissimo of strife.

There was fashioned fragile castles,
Doomed to crumble with a breath,
And beneath their dreary ruins
Drag our fondest hopes to death.

Will there be some sweet to-morrow
That shall thrill our hearts as then!
Will that boyish fascination
Ever come to us again?

Yes, the heart that once has trembled
To the rapture of a boy,
Will be throbbing yet, I fancy,
To some wild, delirious joy.

Cold indeed the man that lingers
In eternal retrospect:
Him no future hopes will quicken,
Him no present joys affect.

Let the past be but the preface
To the scroll of coming years,
As creation was the prelude
To the music of the spheres.
—J. H. Todd, in Inter Ocean.

SARA'S ROMANCE.

The Reward of a Girl Who Overcame False Pride.

"Dearest mamma, couldn't I have it?"

Mrs. Aubrey sat by the half-light of the dim fire—coals were by far too dear for a reckless blaze to be permitted—with the curtain yet undrawn, so that the tender yellow light of the February sunset shone in, and the angles of the room were filled with shadows.

A pretty little room it seemed now, although it would hardly have borne the brilliant, uncompromising light of noonday, for the carpet was darned and mended in many a place, and neatly fashioned rag rugs had been laid skillfully down to hide the spots which were past all redemption. The table-cover was faded by many a washing; the curtains were arranged in folds which should not betray the rags, and the very mantel ornaments were mended with cement.

To keep up the outward show and dignity of a lady upon an income which would have been insufficient for a servant, is trying to the most courageous nature; yet this had been Mrs. Aubrey's task ever since her husband died, leaving her with little Sara, a child of nine summers. She had economized in the most painful degree; she had worn her shabby dresses until they were ready to drop off; she had patched her clothes until there was scarcely a shred left of the original material; she had cut off this luxury and that condiment from her poor table until her diet became literally bread and water; and even then debts grew upon her life like hideous fungi. Her husband had left her a trifle, but this was carefully reserved for the expenses of her little Sara. However she might pinch and save and starve, Sara was always comfortably clad, and had plenty of good, wholesome food to eat. But there are a score of shabby-genteel devices by which reduced ladies can earn a few dollars, and Mrs. Aubrey solicited copying from the village lawyer, sat up long after Sara's pretty eyes were sealed in slumber to embroider fine work for the stores, and even rejoiced to get plain sewing to do, at a rate which was pitifully meager!

It had been seven years of famine, but the end of the long ordeal was approaching at last. Sara was being trained for a teacher, and the graduation day was near at hand—Sara, who had grown into a tall, lovely girl, like a white lily; with deep violet eyes, reddish-brown hair, all interwoven with threads of gold, and cheeks of velvety pink; and Mr. Mitchell, the principal, had promised to use his very best efforts to obtain a situation for Sara when she had graduated; and all seemed couleur de rose.

And in the winter twilight Sara had rushed into the room, bringing with her a breath of frozen, pine-scented air, and told her mother how the graduating class were all to be dressed in white merino and white silk shirred overskirts and broad white ribbon sashes.

"Not a bit of color about us, mamma," the girl breathlessly added, "except the little knots of blue violets we are to wear at our belts."

Mrs. Aubrey looked aghast.

"White merino, dear! With white silk shirred overskirts! Indeed, indeed, Sara, as far as you are concerned, it is quite out of the question!"

"Mamma!" cried out the girl.

"My darling, it would cost twenty-five dollars at the very least," urged Mrs. Aubrey.

"No, mamma," pleaded Sara; "only twenty. Helen Hazelton says we can buy the material all in one piece and get a considerable reduction on it; and you know, mamma, darling, you are such a skillful needlewoman that my dressmaker's bill will be nothing."

"But even then, dearest," said Mrs. Aubrey, "where are we to get the twenty dollars?"

Pretty Sara burst into tears.

"My darling, don't!" pleaded the mother, in whose heart every sparkling drop was like the acute prick of a dagger. "Don't break my heart, Sara! I should like to see you as elegantly dressed as any girl in the school, but you know how poor we are."

And then, with her tear-wet face hidden on her mother's shoulder, Sara sobbed out:

"Couldn't I have it, mamma? Oh, darling mamma, couldn't I?"

"I will do up your old muslin, dear," sobbed the mother. "And I think we can afford some fresh blonde and the new ribbon sash and—"

"Oh, mamma," interrupted poor Sara, "must I wear that old, tattered, shrunken thing, when all the other girls are in merino and white shirred silk?"

"Dearest, what else can we do?"

Mrs. Aubrey could almost have cried with Sara had she dared to give way to her feelings.

"How wretched it is to be poor!" sobbed Sara, sitting down on the hearth rug, with her face in her mother's lap. "Mamma, what have we done that we should be so cramped and ground down, so fettered with poverty?"

"It will not be so always, dear," encouraged her mother.

"No," said Sara, sadly; "I shall be a teacher soon. And then, mamma, you shall have a wine-colored cashmere dress and a set of furs, and I will wear what I please. But, mamma, if I could only have the white merino dress this once!"

"My daughter! my daughter!"

Sara could feel the warm drops from her mother's eyes upon her cheek.

"Mamma!" she cried out, caressingly, "don't cry, that's a darling; I'll wear the old white muslin! I'll wear anything! You have been a heroine, quietly and patiently, all these years, and here am I that can't endure a single privation! Mamma, I'll be a heroine, too."

And the pale mother and blooming daughter clasped each other tenderly in a long, silent embrace.

"But it's a shame, isn't it," resumed Sara, after a brief silence, "that wealth should be so unevenly divided in this world? Look at Helen Hazelton, at the 'court,' with her greenhouses full of flowers, and her pony phaeton, and the diamonds she is to have when she leaves school. It's a surprise for her, mamma, quite a surprise. Col. Hazelton himself showed them to me—a cross and a pair of solitaire eardrops like sparkles of white fire."

"Showed them to you, dear?"

"Yes, mamma!" answered the girl.

"But how came he to do that?"

"Oh, he often talks to me when I am at the court," said unconscious Sara.

"About what, Sara?"

"Oh, about Helen, and about the ferns and orchids in the conservatories and the new birds in the aviary—and about the foreign countries he has traveled in. Oh, I wish you could hear him, mamma," cried the girl, enthusiastically.

"What sort of a man is he, Sara?" asked the mother, becoming vaguely conscious, at this late day, that her pretty treasure was no longer a child but a budding maiden, with all a maiden's sweet possibilities before her.

"He's very handsome, mamma. Dark and tall, with a straight, military way of carrying himself, and the pleasantest voice you ever heard."

"Does he talk to you much?"

"Oh, often, mamma," declared Sara.

Mrs. Aubrey was silent for a few minutes. A vague fear was entering into her heart.

"Sara," said she, at last, "I do not think that it is best for you to be too much at Hazelton court."

"Why not, mamma?" Sara opened her big blue eyes in innocent surprise. "It's so pleasant there, and I like them all so much."

Mrs. Aubrey hesitated. She could not answer: "Because Col. Hazelton is a widower, and people will talk and gossip." So she equivocated a little, and made reply:

"They live so differently from what we do, darling. It is scarcely a good or wise preparation for your new life."

Sara pondered the matter over.

"I don't see what difference it makes, mamma," said she; "but, of course, when I get a situation I shall have no time for visiting; and Helen is going to Paris with her father in the spring, so there will be an end of all my intimacy there."

Brave little Sara! She was a heroine, for she wore the old washed-over muslin dress, standing among the fair young girls in soft merino and lustrous dead-white silk.

"Mamma can't afford it," she answered, quietly, to all the criticism that was uttered.

Helen Hazelton brought her home that evening in the sleigh, with a box of cut rosebuds and East India ferns, and left her with her mother.

Mrs. Aubrey looked up from her sewing.

"My darling," said she, "your cheeks are like carnations!"

"It's the winter air, I suppose," said Sara, flinging down her bonnet. "Mamma, put aside that hateful needle! You are never to sew any more! I've made up my mind not to teach in the New York public schools!"

"Sara!"

"I am going to Hazelton court."

Mrs. Aubrey's faded eyes sparkled.

"To be Helen's governess?" cried she.

"Helen's governess, indeed!" said Sara. "Helen knows as much as I do; mamma, you have guessed wrong this time."

She knelt down on the floor and laid her cheek on her mother's knee.

"Mamma, Col. Hazelton has asked me to marry him," said she, "and I have said yes."

"Asked you to marry him, Sara? But you are such a child!" cried Mrs. Aubrey.

"That's the reason he likes me, he says," confessed blushing Sara.

"And you, dearest—do you love him?"

"Mamma, he's the one man in all the world to me," whispered the girl.

And child and mother wept together a shower of happy tears.

"But, sweetest," whispered Mrs. Aubrey, "you seem such a child to be married."

"Yes, mamma, I know," said Sara, gravely. "But if I am to be happy, the sooner I begin the better."

Which was an incontrovertible piece of logic.—Amy Randolph, in N. Y. Ledger.

German Women.

That the women of Germany are undoubtedly inferior to the men is one of the most striking proofs of the backward state of civilization in Germany. It seems strange, too, since the German girl usually receives an admirable education, together with a thorough training in cookery and needlework. Yet after her marriage she accepts her position as the "Hausfrau" and "Hausmutter," with few ideas or aspirations beyond her kitchen and nursery, and no topics of conversation except the iniquity of her servants and the extravagance of her neighbors. Her husband, on the other hand, is, as a rule, original and intelligent, and would be an agreeable conversationalist if he were not too argumentative and self-opinionated

VANISHED DREAMS.

Beautiful stories, in [illegible] wild,
They told of the fairies when I was a child—
How with feet like the foam-bells, so light and fair,
They entered the dwellings of want and care;
And as morning dew melts off from the grass,
So the cloud of sorrow was sure to pass;
No blight on the crops which the fairies had blest,
For day they brought gladness, for night they brought rest.

Oh heart of my childhood! what vigils vain
Were mine as I watched for the fairy train,
But the feet of the fairies came not nigh;
No glimpse of their beautiful wings flashed by;
And the peasants said: "Ah, they know too well
Where peace and gladness and riches dwell!
Wait—and if clouds darken over your sky,
Surely then will you see them nigh."

Alas! for the home of our childhood days—
Its [illegible], its green [illegible] ways—
I heard them all [illegible],
Over heather and moor flashed the weird corpse-light;
I heard them whisper: "The fairies know—
O'er the homestead they love falls the shadow of woe;
The fire will be quenched, and the hearth be lone,
Ere the winter has past, or the March winds blown."

The fires are quenched, and the hearth is lone;
Dear names are carved on the gray headstone;
Only, I think, in my heart remains
The echo of long-[illegible] pains.
The half-believed legends have passed away;
Life grew too real—they could not stay.
The earth lights have failed—the light is dream;
But the stars of heaven were never so clear!
—Mary Gorges, in Chambers' Journal.

A BOWL OF GRUEL.

What Dolly Gained by Her Culinary Knowledge.

The spoon was suddenly laid down and Uncle Joshua's shaggy brows contracted till they met in a grizzled line across his forehead.

"It's burnt," said he.

"Well," tartly exclaimed Adelina. "I burnt my hand, too; that is, I scalded it dreadfully when I was stirring in the meal. It spluttered and bubbled up. But as for the gruel's being burnt, that's only your notion! I'm sure I didn't cook it long."

"No," Uncle Joshua calmly rejoined, "you didn't cook it long enough; it tastes raw. But the milk was burnt, and you've got it too salty! I can't eat it. It takes a knack to make good gruel. It seems to me that a woman of your age, Adeline—most thirty, aren't you?—ought to know how to cook something fit for a sick person to eat!"

An angry red burned on Adelina's cheeks. She seized the bowl of condemned gruel and flounced down into the dining-room, where the rest of the family were assembled.

"I'll never cook another thing for him as long as I live!" she exclaimed. "I do wish, ma, that when Uncle Joshua sent word that he was coming to visit us, you had written to him that we were sick, or something, and it wasn't convenient!"

"Don't be rash," said Mrs. Dart, a sharp-toned matron, with calculating gray eyes. "Folks say he's rich!"

"I don't believe it!" retorted Adelina.

"Nor do I!" echoed her sister Blanche, a languid blonde. "If he is worth anything why does he dress so shabbily? I almost die of shame every time he goes to church with us!"

"And think of his home!" continued Adelina. "That little red farmhouse, with its rag carpet, featherbeds and windows that won't let down at the top—it's awful!"

"Why, I thought it was a lovely place, with its sloping, moss-covered roof and the big elms around it!" said Dolly.

We have mentioned Dolly last because it seemed to be the fashion in the Dart household. Ever since she was a tiny lass and her father had foolishly wedded the Widow Wood and brought her and her two grown-up daughters to his home, Dolly had been a very insignificant person.

Papa Dart did not long survive his folly, and after his death Dolly was treated worse than ever. She did most of the work and had least of the pleasure. Adelina and Blanche seemed to have a sort of spite against her. Perhaps it was owing to jealousy of her beauty, for Dolly was very pretty.

Few of the fashionable set in the town of Conover knew anything about Dolly.

"She is such a mere child yet—too young to go into society," Mrs. Dart would carelessly remark. "I have Adelina and Blanche to chaperon, and when they are comfortably settled in life, why then it'll be time for Dolly to 'come out.' It isn't likely that she cares much about it, anyway, she's such a home body!"

Dolly was a home-body, but, like most young girls, she had a longing for pretty clothes and gay festivities. And when she heard about the ball that was to be given down at Squire Delano's, the nabob of the town, in honor of the return of his son and daughter—the former from a German university and the latter a wise young damsel from Vassar—when she saw with her own eyes the dainty cream-tinted invitation with her own name, "Miss Dorothy Dart," written on it, she wanted to go very much, indeed, and, for a wonder, summoned up enough boldness to manifest her desire.

"Why, Dolly, what can you be thinking of!" exclaimed her stepmother. "You know I cannot afford to get you a new dress!"

"I can wear my white muslin!" stoutly persisted the young girl.

"Your old muslin? That wouldn't do at all! You'd be a real dowdy!"

"She might have my blue silk fixed over," suggested Blanche, who was not bad-hearted if folks didn't set her up to it.

Adelina frowned. "You said you were going to have your blue silk colored and made into a Watteau wrapper," she remarked, severely.

"Yes, I did intend to," Blanche replied, subdued by the frown, and Mrs. Dart ended the conversation by saying, decidedly:

"You see, Dolly, it's quite impossible! What with Adelina's new wine-colored satin and Blanche's silk, I can't afford to spend a penny more."

Now it so happened that Uncle Joshua had never paid much attention to Dolly. He had either thought that she had too much to do and that he would not add to her cares, or he had preferred to have her half-sister wait on him. But he took kindly notice of her now, when, after her little battle, she came upstairs, bringing him a bowl of gruel that she had made with her own hands, for, wise little woman that she was, she knew that the best way to cure her own unhappiness was to do a kind act for somebody else.

"You made it, you say?" tasting it. "That's first rate! Neither too thick nor too thin. Milk isn't burnt and meal isn't raw! Salted all right, too! Humph! Guess you'll do if you are a mere child! But what makes your eyes so red, child? Been standing too long over a hot stove cooking for an old ogre like me? No! I'll bet my best white Cheshire pig that you've been crying."

Dolly began to give a half hysterical denial, but the old gentleman was so kind and sympathetic that before she hardly knew it the whole story of her desire and her disappointment came out.

"Humph! humph! humph! Too bad, child," was all that Uncle Joshua said, while he sipped his gruel in big spoonfuls. And when the bowl was empty he said: "I wish you'd write a note to Miss Amanda Bartow and ask her if she won't come over and have a game of cribbage with me."

Now, Miss Amanda Bartow was one of the aristocratic spinsters of the town, but she and Uncle Joshua had been old friends and schoolmates, and odd and old-fashioned as he was, she loved him like a brother. Accordingly, she answered the note in person, and the cribbage cards were forthcoming, but I imagine the game wasn't a very spirited one, for the old couple seemed to be talking very earnestly about something else, and before she went home Miss Amanda called Dolly to one side, and said, in low tone:

"So you want to go to the party, do you, my dear? Well, both your uncle and myself would like to have you go, for it's going to be a very fine affair. As for your old muslin dress, just let me take it home with me. Perhaps I may be able to fix it up with some lace and ribbons. Don't mention this to anyone. We'll surprise Mrs. Dart and her daughters."

Dolly knew how to make other nice dishes for the sick, and now that the rest of the family had let him fall into her hands, Uncle Joshua fared sumptuously.

"I should think you'd tire your feet off!" Blanche observed, commiseratingly, while Mrs. Dart added, with a sigh of relief:

"Well, it's a mercy some one suits the old man! I don't know what we'd do if we had to wait on him, now that we are so busy getting ready for the party!"

The evening for the last-mentioned event came. Mrs. Dart and her daughter drove off in a stage of high satisfaction, and hardly had the sound of their hired hack died away before Miss Amanda's private carriage dashed up the road—"For all the world like a fairy godmother's pumpkin coach!" as Dolly afterward laughingly expressed it. Miss Amanda herself alighted from the carriage, stately in her [illegible] velvet and diamonds and bearing a large package in her hand. It contained not the flimsy muslin (which she had taken merely as a ruse to get Dolly's measure), but instead an elaborate gown of white silk brocaded with tiny pink and silver roses. A pair of dainty pink satin slippers, a huge fan of rosy ostrich plumes; a necklace of pink coral set in exquisite silver filigree work and a big bouquet of fragrant roses completed the outfit.

"For me!" Dolly gasped.

"For you!" said Uncle Joshua, who had hobbled to the door on his crutch, and stood peering in with kindly smile on all this finery. "That's to pay for the nice bowl of gruel you made me! And now I'll go back to my room, and do you get all this toggery on as soon as you can!"

Of the great sensation she made, of the surprise and discomfiture of Mrs. Dart and her daughters—of the glee and grace with which Dolly danced—of the complete conquests she made on everybody—why you'll have to ask Miss Amanda. And when Uncle Joshua heard about it, he nodded his gray head in satisfaction, saying:

"That's right! that's right! She deserves the best. I intend that she shall have all I've got—and it's more than most folks think, it is, too! She ought to have some reward—a girl that can cook for sick folks as she does!"—Philadelphia Times.

The Painted Bird Trick.

Briefly it is this: A boy dressed rather shabbily walks along the street holding something carefully concealed in his hands. He looks out for a well-dressed, innocent-looking old lady, and then as he slowly passes her stoops down and, addressing the mysterious things he holds, says: "Poor little one. I'll take care of you. I won't sell you to those fellows." Two rough looking men now walk up to the boy and say: "Look here; for the last time we'll give you three dollars." But the boy shakes his head. As the men drop back, and, when just abreast of the lady, they whisper loud enough for her to hear: "I tell you it's an A1 singer and worth five dollars." The lady scents a mystery and perhaps a bargain. She stops the boy, who explains that the canary flew into his father's house, that it sings beautifully and he would like to keep it, but he is poor, times are bad and if she'll promise to give it a happy home the kind lady can have it for three dollars. An exchange is effected; the boy goes off with the three dollars to a neighboring saloon, where he meets the rough-looking men and divides with them. The lady takes the bird home, puts it into a cage and gives it food and a bath of water. Next day in place of a canary she finds a very sick-looking sparrow with a small quantity of yellow paint still adhering to its wings and body.—San Francisco Chronicle.

GOVERNOR RUSSELL, of Massachusetts, has signed the anti-free pass bill. His action is based upon a written opinion by the Attorney General who says the bill is constitutional.

McKINLEY tariff and dull times are not inviting to voters who were promised by the Republican party exactly the reverse when they passed the bill that made monopolies and trusts thrive.

SENATOR QUAY is said to oppose the candidacy of Senator Sherman for the presidency on the ground of inexpediency. That is always a good and sufficient reason in the eyes of the astute political boss.

JEMES MONAGHAM, of West Chester, has been appointed Supreme court reporter by Governor Pattison to succeed Boyd Cumrine, whose term has expired. He is a graduate of Lafayette College, a native of Missouri and a member of the Chester county bar. He is a Democrat.

A MAN in New Jersey has been fined $500 for selling copies of the song, "Maggie Murphy's Home." This is not to be taken as an indication of musical culture on the part of Jerseymen, however. The only fault found with him was that he was violating the copyright law.

As soon as the Republican organs have had their say about the legislative redistricting of New York we trust they will favor the public with a few highly moral reflections on the congressional gerrymander in Ohio, where the Democrats were allowed six of the twenty-one Congressmen.

OF the delegates elected to the Minneapolis convention, the Washington Post prints a list showing over one hundred of 898 are federal officeholders, while many others are the mere shows of their officeholding backers. In the Southern states a majority of the delegates elected are of this character.

THE duties paid on tin plate imported into this country amounted to $1,384,977 during the month of March 1892 according to the report of the treasury department. Our swaddling tin-plate industries are expensive luxuries that the people who use tin have to pay for and the country would be well rid of them.

WHEN future generations shall read the history of American administrations and see among the prominent features of Harrison's Census Bureau that was run in the interest of the politicians, and a Pension Bureau that was managed for the benefit of the pension sharks, they will give it precedence in the prostitution of the purposes of government.

THE Mississippi valley was badly flooded last week, many persons drowned, thousands of head of live stock were drowned and hundreds of acres of crops ruined. Many families have been rendered homeless and a large number have been made bankrupt. The situation was terrible, as the principal railroads were rendered useless by the overflow.

THE New Jersey Democratic state convention met at Trenton, on Wednesday, and after adopting resolutions reaffirmthe the doctrines in the Democratic platforms of 1884 and 1888, denounced the McKinley tariff, and passed a resolution instructing their delegates to support Grover Cleveland in the Chicago convention as long as he was a candidate.

A CLERGYMAN, Rev. Francis Marsten, was asked to offer prayer in the Ohio legislature and because he referred to legislators "gathered here in this maelstrom of iniquity, fraud and corruption" and to the "bribes, bribers and bribetakers in our midst," some of the Republican members became incensed and fancied they were properly angered. These be strange times, indeed.

AN application for 50,000 square feet of floor space at the World's Fair was filed with Director General Davis, by Brother Marielen, of Memphis, Tennessee, representing Cardinal Gibbons and the Archbishops and Bishops of the Roman Catholic church in the United States. The purpose for which the space asked is to be utilized is to afford room exclusively for the Catholic educational exhibit which is expected to be the finest ever undertaken in this country.

EMPEROR WILLIAM of Germany narrowly escaped being killed in a runaway between Schlobbitten and Proeketwitz on Monday. The Emperor was driving with Count Dohna. One of the horses became frightened and the others unmanageable and they all started down the highway at a terrific pace. One of the horses fell while the carriage was being whirled along the edge of a low embankment and the shock threw the Emperor from the driver's seat into the ditch. He escaped unhurt.

FIFTEEN millions of dollars are being taken from the pockets of the American people annually, says the Philadelphia Herald, and offered as a bonus to those who may venture into the experiment of making tin plate in this country. It is a tempting bait and will unquestionably have the effect of inducing many to try to get a share of it. To be sure, the enterprise is handicapped by there being no natural advantages for tin manufacture in the United States. The most essential article is wanting in the fact that we have no tin; but when the American people are being made to pay so liberally for the encouragement of the industry, the home manufacturers can afford to import the tin they use, and even the black plates, and make a handsome profit.

The big bonus offered is enticing Welsh tin operators to leave the original location of their industry and become beneficiaries of the American system of protection. Two of them, who have concluded to sell out in Wales and transfer their operations to this country, have given their views on the American tin question in an interview in a Republican paper, in which they scout the idea that tin plate can't be made in the United States. Of course it can be made here. Put on a tariff high enough to keep all other tin out—increase its price so that with every natural disadvantage there is money to the manufacturer in the making of it, and there is no question that American tin can be made. But at what a great and unnecessary expense to the consumers. Would it not be wiser to let tin be manufactured where nature has furnished the materials, and exchange for it the products of this country which require a foreign market? This would be better policy, we think, than to take fifteen million dollars out of the pockets of the people every year to foster an unnatural industry.

THE Republican Senators, says the New York World, are determined to prevent, if possible, a vote upon any of the tariff reform bills passed by the House. Their excuse is that "the whole tariff question was thoroughly discussed two years ago."

The tariff was, indeed, thoroughly discussed two years ago, and the people condemned the outrageous impositions of the McKinley bill by more than 1,300,000 majority. It was discussed again last year in the three debatable and typical states of New York, Massachusetts and Iowa, and the voters repeated their verdict in favor of the Democrats and tariff reduction.

For the Republicans Senators to refuse even a vote on the relief bills passed by the people's representatives now is a defiance and nullification of the popular will.

No doubt the fear that all their Senators cannot be trusted to vote against some of the bills leads the majority to choose the policy of smothering them. But, whatever the motive, the duty and the opportunity of the Democrats in Congress are plain. They should send to the Senate a sufficient number of tax-reduction bills to make perfectly plain the Democratic policy and purpose.

They could ask no better issue for the national campaign than will be created by a Republican refusal even to consider bills to reduce the worse than war taxes upon the necessaries of the people.

MAJOR JOHN D. WORMAN, secretary of the Democratic societies of Pennsylvania, has issued the following address to the Democratic societies of the state:

The Democratic societies impatiently awaits the coming of the battle. Its members believe in the success, the glory and the grand destiny of our great Keystone State.

The Democratic society of Pennsylvania was not founded for a single mission, which accomplished, left it drifting with no fixed star of principle to guide it.

The influence of the past speaks to us in the voice of the present. It fights for measures, not men; the principles of government, not men's character, are to be discussed; a nations policy, not personal ambition, is to be determined. We enter the fight with a living faith, founded upon principles that are just, enduring as old as the nation itself, yet ever young, vigorous and progressive, because there is ever work for it to do. Its greatest good, its highest glory, is that it is, and is to be the people's party. Organize, reunite Democratic societies.

THE American Federation of Labor has come out flatly in favor of the opening of the World's fair on Sunday. Samuel Gompers, the president of the federation has addressed a circular letter to all the trade unions in the United States urging them to use whatever influence they may each have to secure the opening of the fair on Sunday. He claims that this is the only day on which the large majority of the workingmen can visit the great exhibition, and from this standpoint arguing that they should not be deprived of such an opportunity for enjoyment and instruction.

SENATOR MITCHELL has offered a resolution in the Senate at Washington which was referred to the Select committee on Quadro-Centennial, instructing that committee to inquire into the propriety of causing suitable provisions to be made by Congress to cover the cost of transportation and subsistance to the national guard of the different states, to enable such national guards to be present in encampment for a reasonable period at the World's Columbian Exposition.

THE big political leaders in the Republican party seem to be in accord in the opinion that Harrison cannot be reelected if he is renominated and have no hesitancy in expressing that opinion. Yet how to down him for the nomination is a question that is bothering them for with the exception of Blaine, they have no other leader that would be more available.

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, D. C. May 21, 1892. Mr. Blaine is not playing the role of a political sphinx for fun. He has a purpose in exhibiting himself every day where he knows his appearance will be commented upon, and while he refuses to talk about the Republican nomination, further than to say he does't want it, he tells every one who calls upon him that he feels stronger than at any time for ten years past, and that his health is perfect. There is no doubt that his health has greatly improved recently; that is plain to all who see him, and there is good ground for the suspicion that he is perfectly willing now to accept the nomination if he can get it without saying beforehand that he wishes it. His health is not the only reason for his change of mind. Mrs. Blaine, whose wishes always exercise a powerful influence over him, has, it is said, made up her mind that she wants him to accept the nomination, just to keep it away from Mr. Harrison, whose wife she wishes to humble because of some real or fancied slight. The philosopher who said "a woman is at the bottom of everything" was not far out of the way.

Senator Hill regards the death of Senator Barbour as a heavy blow to his presidential prospects, as it was undoubtedly to the party at large.

A number of prominent artists, here in attendance upon the first annual meeting of the National Art Association urged the Ways and Means committee of the House and the Finance commitee of the Senate to report a bill repealing the duty on works of art.

The attempts to tack a free coinage amendment to the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, in the House, was a failure. The chair—Representative Lester of Georgia—ruled them out on points of order, and on appeal the House sustained the chair.

The House adopted the resolution offered by Representative Boather, calling on the Attorney General for information as to what action, if any, his office had taken toward ascertaining whether the recent Reading railroad combine' had violated the anti-trust law. The frequency with which resolutions of this sort have of late been fired at the Attorney General will probably convince that official that the able Democratic lawyers of the House are carefully watching his office, and that more than a mere pretense of fighting the trusts is required.

True to the policy of the Republican party in legislating for favored classes, Senator Chandler introduced a bill authorizing Austin Corbin and his associates, who propose forming a steamship company, to obtain American registry for all vessels of 7,000 or more tons, having a speed of not less than nineteen knots an hour, which may come into their possession by purchase or otherwise, provided: that the said company shall contract to have built one vessel, of equal tonnage and speed with the foreign built vessels, in an American navy yard. Why should this favor be granted to Millionaire Corbin and his associates and denied to others? When this bill gets to the House an attempt will be made to amend it by striking out the names and granting the privileges named in the bill to any citizen or citizens who wish to have them on the terms proposed.

Some alarm has been created among the Republicans who have been doing lots of shouting about the successful manner in which the administration secured acceptances from Germany, Great Britain, Austria Hungary and Italy to take part in the proposed international monetary conference, by an official letter from the state department informing Secretary Foster, in answer to an inquiry, that not a single acceptance had yet been received from any of the countries to which invitations were sent. Anti-Harrison Republicans are charging that misleading information has been purposely given out to help Mr. Harrison secure the nomination.

Secretary Foster now wishes he had not been so precipitate in writing that the work on the immigrant station on Ellis Island would remain a monument to wisdom long after the criticism that had assailed it had passed from the public mind. The chairmen of the House and Senate Immigration committees have sent a letter to the secretary, from which the following is extracted: "We suggest that immediate repairs and strengthening of the main support to the upper floor of the main building at Ellis Island be made, in the interest of humanity, otherwise the building will not last until the end of the present investigation, and it will be attended by a great loss of life and destruction of property." Queer sort of a monument to wisdom.

Democrats protested in vain against the increase in the number of new vessels provided for by the Senate amendments. The Republicans were determined from the first that they should go through, and several Democratic Senators voted with them. Senator Vest told them that if they wanted a navy war the surest way to get it was constructing a powerful navy.

Is 105 Years Old.

BEAVER FALLS, May 23.—A remarkable case of longevity is found in the person of Mrs. Jane Bumgardner, who arrived in New Brighton from Wood county, W. Va., on Friday last. Mrs. Bumgardner was born in Georgia on Christmas Day, 105 years ago. In company with her son she walked from the depot to Black House run, a distance of almost a mile. For fifty years she has been a habitual smoker. Her eyesight, memory and in fact her general health, is remarkable. She is able to do much of her own sewing and can thread a needle without glasses equally as well as a woman of 40. Joseph Bumgardner, her youngest son, with whom she resides, and who has just moved to New Brighton, has authentic proof of the old lady's age.

Lands Rendered Barren.

SUNBURY, Pa., May 24.—To-day the arbitrators in the case of the farmers living along Shamokin creek, Northumcounty, against the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and others handed down awards in 10 cases that, if sustained, may mean a loss of millions of dollars to the companies.

For years the coal dirt from the mines has been washed by each recurring freshet on the lands of the farmers along the creek. In 1889 the land was rendered barren. Ten cases were prosecuted, and now, after taking testimony for three years, damages are awarded to the plaintiffs. Other suits will follow. The defendants will appeal to the courts.

Snow Four Inches Deep,

CONCORD, N. H., May 21.—Snow commenced falling at 6 o'clock this morning along the Northern division of the Boston and Maine railroad, commencing at White River Junction and continuing as far south as North Boscarven. In many towns four inches covered the freshly opened leaves and flowers. Every bush and plant was white with a cold coating of snow and ice, freezing as fast as it came to the luckless branches.

A Father Shot.

MADISON, Ga., May 23.—S. W. Conley was shot and killed from ambush Saturday evening by E. A. Cochran. Conley had a daughter of fourteen who was attending the neighborhood schools up to three months ago, when she disappeared. It was then discovered that she had eloped with Cochran, a man of fifty-five years of age, who had lost a leg in the late war and an eye in a bar-room fight, while the Conleys were people of means. As soon as the girl and Cochran were located the girl was taken from her husband and restored to her father by order of court.

About a month ago, with a gang of friends, Cochran surrounded the Conley residence for the purpose of rescuing the wife, as they expressed it. A volley of shots from the residence scattered the besiegers, several of whom were severely wounded.

As Mr. Conley was returning home from Madison Saturday, when passing through a clump of woods near his house, he was fired upon, the bullet going through his head. The neighborhood is greatly aroused over the assassination.

A New Steel Process.

PITTSBURG, May 23.—The Millvale iron and steel company will start in operation within a few weeks a new process for the manufacture of steel. The furnace is completely hidden from view by high board partitions and the work is being done by imported workmen under the supervision of E. L. Haoortsky, an experienced steel manufacturer of Germany. Work has been started in preparing the ore and the different ingredients used in the new process are being prepared under cover. The mysterious furnace is being built on the open hearth plan but with peculiar "checkquer work" method of mixing and applying incandescent heat to the specially prepared mixture.

The new furnace will be fired shortly and it is claimed they will make a steel superior to any now in use, and which can be furnished as cheaply as iron. The steel will be malleable, so that it can be used for making tubing, and soft enough to allow as durable threads to be cut upon it as iron permits. Considerable interest is being manifested in the result of the experiment.

Highest Water Known.

NEW ORLEANS, May 24.—A crevasse is reported on the Nicholson levee on Red river, nearly opposite Shreveport. A number of people barely escaped with their lives, and hundreds of cattle were lost. Above Shreveport nearly the entire valley of the Red river, from hill to hill, is under water, and the river is expected to reach the greatest height ever known.

A more hopeful view of Tessier crevasse, in St. James' parish, on the Mississippi, is taken to-day, and it is thought that any increase in it can be prevented, even if the break cannot be closed. The parishes in North Louisiana are raising a special fund to provide guards for the levees. A large number of citizens have also volunteered their services. Reports come from all quarters of appeals for aid. The negroes on Red river have sent a special appeal to the president for aid. Governor Stone, of Mississippi, has also received appeals for aid.

An Engineering Impossibility.

The floods in the west have not been so destructive of human life as was the sudden downpour that swept over fated Johnstown, in this state, but the destruction of property has been greater than even in that terrific visitation. The worst feature of this form of calamity is the inability to provide against it and the certainty of future visitations of even greater severity. As the population shall increase along the river courses, and the forests be cut away upon the headwaters of tributary streams, the bulk of life and property to be destroyed and the volume of water from melting snows and protracted rainfall will alike contribute to make disaster more appaling.

It does not seem to be an engineering possibility to confine the waters of such great streams as the Missouri and Mississippi within their banks.—Phila. Record.

Another Vanderbilt Dead.

William H. Vanderbilt, aged 21, son of Cornelius Vanderbilt, died last night from the effects of homorrhages brought on by typhus fever. He was taken ill on May 4 at New Haven, Conn., at the time very seriously. As there was no typhus fever in New Haven at that time it is supposed he contracted the disease while on a trip through the Western states about the Easter holidays.

The deceased inherited by the will of his grandfather, William H. Vanderbilt, $1,000,000, the income to be converted to his use when he attained his majority, the principal to be placed to his credit when he became 30 years of age. He was the only one of the grandchildren of William H. Vanderbilt mentioned in his will. The deceased was one of the most popular men in the junior class of Yale College.

Six People Blown Up.

The factory of the Ætna Pyrotechnic company at Hartford, Conn., blew up Saturday, and six people were killed. The bodies of J. L. B. Sibley, paymaster; Emma Tarbox, Emma Tregunza, and Maggie Capen were recovered soon after the explosion. A number of persons were seriously injured.

Maggie Keating and Kittie Golding, of Hartford, and Rose Harvey, of Cottage Grove, were the only girls taken out alive. It will not be possible to ascertain the real cause of the disaster. The business of manufacturing the Greek fire has been carried on there for eight years, and the works have been located in a thickly-settled part of the city. The Coroner will make a thorough investigation.

Complied with His Request,

BASTROP, La., May 25.—S. C. Brigham manager of a plantation, was shot from ambush by an old negro on Sunday. The negro then walked to the plantation residence, summoned Colonel Philips, the owner, and told him that he had killed Brigham and wanted to be hanged for it. Colonel Philips put a rope around the negro's neck and hanged him to the limb of a tree.

—Mrs. Lazelle, widow of Walter Lazelle, who was killed at Dickerson's run by a locomotive being ditched, owing, as alleged in the petition, to the tires in the driving wheels being defective, Saturday afternoon commenced suit at Youngstown, Ohio, against the Pittsburg and Lake Erie railroad, asking judgment for $25,000 damages.

—Anna Dickinson's suit for $6,000 against the Republican national committee for breach of a contract to deliver campaign speeches came up in the Supreme court at New York Tuesday. In the suit she makes Mr. Clarkson, Senator Quay, John C. New, J. Sloat Fassett, Samuel Fessenden, W. W. Dudley, and others defendants.

—While temporarily insane, Mrs. Sarah H. Shaw, of Millville, near Pittsburg, attempted suicide on Tuesday morning by jumping into the Allegheny river from the Forty-third street bridge. She was not injured by the fall and was rescued by some boatmen after she had floated a quarter of a mile. Mrs. Shaw is sixty years of age and will probably die from the shock and exposure. On Sunday afternoon Demoss and some companions were standing on a street corner, performing tricks. Several times he was unsuccessful, but the last attempt he opened his mouth wide, and before he could provent it, it had slipped down his throat.

—Cora Nicholls, the 26-year old daughter of James Nicholls, a wealthy Stowe township Allegheny county farmer, was found dead in a barn by her father on Tuesday evening, with a bullet hole in her temple. It is not yet known whether she was accidently shot or committed suicide, or met with foul play. Her relatives are inclined to the belief that the shooting was accidental, as there was no cause for the suicide. In the vicinity of the Nicholls' are a large number of Hungarians, and by some it is thought that these may have had something to do with the girl's death.

—The past two years has witnessed an alarming destruction of pine timber in the counties of Hardy, Pendleton, Mineral, Grant and Hampshire in West Virginia, and the adjoining counties of Virginia. The territory covers 6,000 square miles between the Allegheny and Blue Ridge mountains, and should the destruction continue the pine will soon be gone. In a healthy growth of trees, destruction once begun, myriads of these destructive insects will breed and attack the healthy trees by the thousands. In Pendleton county the destruction is complete and all during the past three years. The best specimens are attacked first, such as the yellow pine and pitch pine, and later on the scrub and other pines are attacked.

BALTZELLS'

SUEDE gloves have a remarkable attraction for ladies and yet it is scarcely to be wondered at when we remember that their soft flexible material makes them seem to become one with the wearer's hand. The Suede is still in the lead, yet the glaci kid has its devotee and both styles are in demand. Refined shades are the light and medium tints of tan, gray and wood colors, the effect always being more elegant when the gloves are of a lighter shade than the costume; therefore there is an unusual demand for gloves in light shades for street wear and visiting purposes. We have a large assortment of kid gloves, especially the P. and P. in the fashionable shades that show the same admirable characteristics as our previous shipments. Our stock shows:

$1.50—The P. and P., Baltzells' special, all shades of tans, modes, grays, browns and blacks in 5 books are $1.50 and extremely elegant.

He was survived by a wife and five children, all of whom are now deceased. James Griffin, when a young man, learned the blacksmith trade and worked at the business for a number of years in Johnstown. In 1863 Mr. Griffin was elected to the office of Register and Recorder on the Democratic ticket in this county, and at the end of his term was renominated and re-elected, filling the office in a highly creditable manner. During his six years' residence in Ebensburg he made many warm friends in the north of the county who will be sorry to learn of his death. At the time of the Johnstown flood Mr. Griffin and two sisters were at their home on Walnut street and were carried away by the waters, Mr. Griffin being rescued a couple of miles below Johnstown; one sister was found dead at Ninevah, and the other found badly injured in the debris at the stone bridge and soon after died from her injuries. Communication.

EBENSBURG, Pa., May 23, 1892.

Editor Cambria Freeman:

SIR:—Last Sunday morning I was agreeably surprised by my Sunday school class, which I have been teaching several years, by the presentation of a beautiful Oxford S. S. Teachers' Edition of the Holy Bible as a token of their regard and respect for me as their teacher. I was so taken by surprise at the time by this manifestation of their esteem that I was unable to properly thank them for it, but I now wish to take this opportunity of doing so and express the hope that it may be the means of stimulating me to more zeal and faithfulness in the future. JOHN J. EVANS.

To Withdraw Brotherhood Men

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., May 23.—E. P. Sargeant, Grand Master of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen and President of the Supreme Councils of the United Order of Railway Employes, and P. H. Morrissey, Vice-Grand Master of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, have carefully examined the grievances which the trainmen in the employ of the Cambria Iron Company presented to General Manager Price. It was decided that all Brotherhood men should be withdrawn from the Cambria Works at once. The men will be taken care of by the organizations and positions will be secured for them as rapidly as possible.

The Cambria Company is to be advertised in the Brotherhood's magazine as a non-Union organization. A rule will be made absolute that no trainman who works in the Cambria yards from this date can ever become a member of any of the organizations.

While this action will not result in any stoppage of the works, it will prevent many of the best trainmen in the country from accepting employment with the company.

Half Rates to Gettysburg via Penn sylvania Railroad.

On Thursday, June 2d, 1892 the "High Water Mark" Monument will be dedicated on the field of Gettysburg. This monument marks the highest point within the Union lines reached by Pickett's troops in the memorable charge of July 3d, 1863. The monument has been erected under the auspices of the Battlefield Memorial Association. The dedicatory ceremonies will be highly interesting, consisting of speeches, poems, music, and military exercises. A large number of veterans, both officers and privates, will be gathered on the historic field and the occasion will be a most memorable one.

For the benefit of those desiring to attend, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will, on June 1st and 2d, sell excursion tickets from all principal stations on the lines to Gettysburg at a single fare for the round trip. Return coupons will be valid for use until June 4th, inclusive.

Half Rates to Minneapolis via Pennsylvania Railroad.

For the benefit of delegates and visitors to the Republican National Convention at Minneapolis, on June 7th, 1892, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell excursion tickets to Minneapolis, from all principal stations on its lines, at a single fare for the round trip. The rate from New York is $31.50; Philadelphia, $29.75; Baltimore, $28.50; Washington, $28.59, and other stations in proportion. The tickets will be sold from June 1st. to 5th, inclusive, and the return coupons will be good to leave Minneapolis or St. Paul from June 10th to 25th inclusive, 1892. A choice of routes west of Chicago may be made.

Spring Fever.

The gradual opening of the budding trees and the shooting upwards of the blades of grass are signs of the advent of spring. The farmer is already at work stimulating the growth of his crop by fertilizers to insure a rich harvest. Nature needs stimulation and why should not man? The system needs building up after the attacks of grippe and cold, and the only tonic is pure whiskey. Max Klein, of Allegheny, Pa., has the endorsement of eminent physicians, certifying to the purity of his famous Silver Age and Duquesne Rye Whiskies. Sold everywhere at $1.50 and $1.25 per full quart. Six-year-old Penna. Rye Whiskies, absolutely pure, at $1.00 per quart or six quarts for $5.00. Send for catalogue and price list of all kinds of liquors to Max Klein, 82 Federal street, Allegheny, Pa.

Miscellaneous Notices.

EBENSBURG MARBLE AND GRANITE Works, as sketched by a special reporter of the Johnstown Daily Herald.—Reliable dealers and fine goods.

"During a recent flying trip to Ebensburg the writer of this article visited the Marble and Granite Works of Jas. Wilkinson & Son, which were founded in 1880. The senior member of this progressive firm has had an experience of thirty-five years, and his son and partner is also a skilled worker. The class of work they produce is of the highest class and style. From four to five hands are employed and the very finest monuments in the county seat are specimens of their skill. Shipments are made through this and to adjoining counties.

"All kinds of cemetery work is executed and a fine line of Iron Railing is handled and sold. The stock of work kept on hand (received by the car-load) is very extensive and many very fine monuments are exhibited, two especially being executed in the rustic style and in imitation of brickwork, with a finely executed cross on the top. Among the many fine monuments erected by this firm is an eight ton fifteen-feet-high monument for Sheriff Griffith, monument for Father Christy (sixteen feet high), also monuments for Jacob Kibler and daughter of John Griffith. Both gentlemen give personal attention to business as well as executing the finest work. In all the time they have been in business they have adhered strictly to the maxim all goods just as represented and prices as low as the same class of work can be bought elsewhere. We have no hesitancy in recommending Messrs. Wilkinson & Son to our readers as reliable business men, progressive and trustworthy. Visit their establishment before ordering elsewhere."

☞Special attention paid to setting work.

PROFITABLE SPORT.

There Is Money in Coyote Scalps in California.

It Has Cost the State One Hundred Thousand Dollars for the Trophies in Nine Months—The Counties Infested.

An act passed by the last legislature provides that a bounty of five dollars shall be paid out of the general fund in the state treasury to any person who kills a coyote, provided the scalp be presented within three months after the killing.

Probably no piece of recent legislation created such a furor throughout the interior as did this bounty act, says the San Francisco Chronicle. Originally intended to be a means for the extermination of the obnoxious and predacious coyote, the act has had the additional effect of creating an army of nimrods who have ever since been active in hunting down this profitable animal.

The killing bee commenced during April of last year, extending through all the counties of the state except Solano, Yuba, Sonoma, San Francisco, Marin, Humboldt, Glenn and Del Norte. Unfortunately for these districts, the coyote is not native to the soil, although plentiful enough through the rest of the state.

At first the coyotes were hunted in a desultory fashion, the scalps coming in one at a time. But the county justices, whose business it became to "swear in" the hunters' spoils, spread the news of the bounty far and wide, and by May organized hunters gave up other pursuits to chase the nimble coyote. The clerks of the interior county boards have had their safes stuffed with skins, and the new industry promises to take rank with the tamer pursuits of horticulture and viticulture if it continues to be encouraged.

Interest in the bounty caused an enterprising syndicate in southern California to employ Mexicans across the line to kill coyotes and smuggle the skins over, but the authorities nipped this little scheme in the bud. Other unscrupulous hunters have tried to palm off all sorts of skins and animal profiles on the district clerks, and perhaps they have succeeded in some instances. The act, however, requires that the scalp "must contain the ears and nose of the coyote," and this condition prevents deception from being an easy matter.

Through the courtesy of Secretary of State E. G. Waite and State Comptroller E. P. Colgan the Chronicle is able to give figures showing the number of certificates issued thus far, the amount of the bounty paid and the number of coyotes killed.

The board of supervisors of each county determines the number of scalps deposited with the clerk during each quarter and gives to the depositor a certificate showing the number of scalps presented and the sum due him at the rate of $5 a scalp. These certificates are presented to the state comptroller, who draws his warrant on the general fund.

Up to the 19th of January the amount of warrants drawn for payment of the bounty was $55,640. The amount of certificates issued by the clerks during the first and second quarters ending June 30 and September 30, 1891, respectively, was $58,610, so that certificates to the amount of $2,970 for the first two quarters remain to be paid. None of the claims for the December quarter has as yet reached the comptroller's office. From a comparative statement furnished by the state comptroller showing the amounts due on certificates issued by the clerks of the various counties for the three-quarters the extent of the coyote killing business is readily gathered. In the nine months ended December 31, 1891, Fresno county hunters earned $4,820. In some of the other counties the figures for the same period are: Kern, $12,603; Los Angeles, $3,095; Merced, $5,555; Modoc, $3,265; Monterey, $5,985; San Bernardino, $7,615; San Diego, $3,785; San Luis Obispo, $5,380; Tulare, $9,910.

From the totals it is seen that up to December 31, 1891, the amount for which the state is liable to coyote hunters is $98,910. During the first quarter 5,637 skins were captured; during the second, 6,294, and during the third 7,883—a total of 19,814. These figures best illustrate how plentiful the coyote must have been and what interest is being taken in its extermination. The climax in the thrilling and remunerative pastime might be reached in the establishment of coyote farms. Then the hunter could simply walk into his stockade and knock down a few hundred dollars of scalps with a stout cudgel—that is, provided the state did not draw the line at domesticated coyotes.

REDEEMING BANK NOTES.

Many Curious Anecdotes of Their Partial Destruction Are on Record.

Many an interesting story might be told of the manner in which bank notes are sometimes redeemed, writes Harold W. George in the Chautauquan. They are sent to the treasury department in every conceivable form. Sometimes men will hide their money in chimneys, and the good housewife, ignorant of the whereabouts of the treasure, will build up a fire that heats the chimney and sets fire to the valuable contents. Mice and rats, particularly in stores and banks, steal the precious paper out of tills and carry it away to make nests. Dogs destroy and swallow it; and goats, which are said to exist at times on tin cans and back-lot deposits, are on record at the treasury as having tried to live on rolls of money which came in their way. In cases of this kind the animals are killed, unless thought to be more valuable than the money lost, and the little wads of pellets found in the stomachs of the offending quadrupeds are rescued and forwarded for redemption. Babies have also been known to swallow valuable bank notes, but there is no record of one having been killed to make it disgorge what it had eaten.

It is a rule that no bank note can be redeemed unless at least three-fifths of it are presented at the treasury, or the loser makes affidavit that his money was lost under circumstances such as to preclude its recovery. The strongest kind of evidence is necessary to make the government officials redeem lost or destroyed money when the notes in question are not forthcoming.

PASTOR KOENIG'S NERVE TONIC

[illegible] XII
86 Chester Pl., Brooklyn, N. Y., June 19, '90.
For over twelve years my son has been afflicted with spasms; he would have one every two weeks until about six months ago; then one every two weeks. We took him to a number of first-class physicians and we tried everything and any number of remedies without deriving any encouragement in his case, and had commenced to despair of ever being able to cure him at all, when we heard of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic and concluded to give it a trial. The result has [illegible]. It is more than three months since he commenced to take this Nerve Tonic and he has never been sick since. Please accept our most sincere thanks, for we feel that you have not only saved him of a great affliction but have saved his life as well, as we do not think he could have lived long in the condition he was in before he commenced taking your valuable remedy.

A NEW CAVALRY WEAPON.

A Rifle Carried Underneath the Horse Will Shoot Accurately.

Capt. W. F. Peel, of the British army, has invented and tested a contrivance for adding to the effective fighting strength of the cavalry. The invention, says the United Service Gazette, consists of an attachment for rifles or other firearms to the harness of cavalry horses in such a manner that they may, while so attached, be fired at the will of the rider.

Fitted to the under side of the girth, or belly band, is a clip or other suitable appliance for sustaining the firearm in a central position, longitudinally, under the body of the horse, the muzzle end of the firearm protruding forward in the direction of and preferably beyond the chest of the animal, the barrel passing between his forelegs. Suitable attachments are also fitted to the harness to support and adjust the firearm.

The rider is provided with means for discharging the firearm while the latter remains in the position above described. These means may consist of mechanical, electrical, pneumatic or other appliances.

In working by means of electricity a battery, accumulator or dynamo may be fitted to the saddle and electro magnets or other appliance may be fitted so as to operate the trigger of the firearm, the connection being effected by wire so arranged that, by touching a button, the electric force causes the piece to fire, the operation being repeated as required until the firearm has discharged its ammunition.

A bearing rein or other attachment to the bit or bridle is arranged to prevent the animal's head being lowered when the gun is being fired.

Experiments with Capt. Peel's attachment were made recently at the Curragh and at Pirbright, and proved that the rifle could be fired with the attachment without startling the horse and with a fair degree of accuracy at short ranges.

It has been objected that Capt. Peel's invention could not be used with the present cavalry drill, but it may very fairly be argued that drill should depend on weapons, and not weapons on drill; that if cavalry would be advantaged by the addition of this new mode of offense, the drill must be modified so far as may be necessary to admit of its introduction.

FEATHERED BOARDERS.

The Novel Enterprise Established by a Pennsylvanian.

An interesting hotel for summer boarders is described by a Reading (Pa.) correspondent of the Chicago Herald. Music is a popular diversion at summer resorts, but this place is no doubt exceptional for the quality and variety of the music furnished by the guests. The proprietor had his attention called, not long ago, to the fact that ladies on leaving home for the summer are often at a loss what to do with their pet birds, not wishing to inflict their care upon friendly neighbors, nor to trust them to careless servants. So he advertised for "bird boarders," and now his house is full.

The rates of board vary with the different species of birds, according to the amount of attention they require and the character of food suited to their tastes. Canaries are boarded for twenty-five cents a week. A common soft cracker, with mixed seed and occasional hard-boiled eggs grated, with plenty of cuttlefish bone, is all they demand. The noisy parrot is considered a profitable boarder at fifty cents a week. It is entirely satisfied with crackers, peanuts, sunflower seeds, and unhulled rice.

More aristocratic birds, however, such as bulfinches, nightingales and mocking-birds, must have ants' eggs, which are prepared in Europe and shipped here, together with meal-worms and expensive seeds of particular kinds. One dollar and a half a week is charged for the board of these species.

The landlord says that the companionship which his feathered boarders enjoy in their summer boarding house adds materially to their well-being, and in the case of song birds to the quality of their singing.

Among the interesting bird guests this season are a collection of Hartz mountain and English canaries, several macaws, Cuban parrots, American finches and nightingales. The landlord endures the noise with equanimity and feels thankful that his guests cannot get out of their cages and storm the business counter with their complaints and remarks, as sea-shore visitors sometimes do.

Names for the Grip.

In the Congregationalist a physician writes interestingly about the grip. In Jackson's day his opponents called the disease "Jackson's itch," and Tyler's opponents called it the "Tyler grippe." La grippe is only one of the figurative terms used by the French to describe the influenza. Others are "petite poste," "petite courier," "grenade," "follette," "coquette," and "la generale." "La grippe" secured general acceptance from its graphic suggestiveness. The Germans have various descriptive names for the grip, such as "blitz-catarrh" (lightning catarrh), "schafshusten" (sheep cough), "huehuenziep" (crowing), "mode-fieber" (fashionable fever), etc. The Russians call it Chinese catarrh. The Germans often call it the Russian pest, the Italians name it the German disease, the French call it the Italian fever and the Spanish catarrh. The Italians invented the term influenza in the seventeenth century, and attributed the disease to the influence of certain planets.

Business and Good Usage Harmonizing.

"Would you say 'it looks as though' or 'it looks as if'?" inquired the reporter, pausing a moment to sharpen his pencil.

LEGENDS OF HAUNTED HILL.

Traditions of Love and Hate That Are Floating Around Among the Indians.

Haunted hill, in Frazier, on the road from Springville to Porterville, is an odd-looking mound which is wrapped up in the mysteries of several Indian legends, says the Tulare (Cal.) Times. Some of the traditions were told to us in 1874, when we first visited this region, and ever since we have endeavored to learn the true stories. The Indians are scattered and their legends are difficult to obtain; those possessed of intelligence will not or do not care to talk. But from white men living here many years ago, and who learned to speak in the Indian language, we have gathered the partial narrative of the legends of Haunted hill, known in the Indian tongue as "Wailing mountain."

Two legends are told—one a tale of Indian love and jealousy, the other the story of a dreadful and fatal battle between the Tule river Indians and their enemies, the Mexicans residing near San Diego, in this state.

Regarding the first tradition but scanty details can be obtained. It is probable the older of the legends and the time of its origin dates back ages ago, and it has been handed down from parent to child among the Tulare Indians for hundreds of years. This much only can be learned: A tribe living on the banks of the Tule east of the hill gave origin to the legend. Among some members of the tribe a bitter jealousy arose, having love for a source. A faction having won the affections of six women, the rivals resolved on sanguinary revenge. Abiding time and waiting an unguarded hour, they pursued these women to the top of Wailing mountain and murdered them. Every night, the Indians aver, the ground on the summit opens and the six women appear, only to vanish instantly. Since then no Indian will visit the hill at night.

The other legend is perhaps the more authentic. It is the one mostly told by the few surviving members of the once prosperous and numerous Tulare Indians. In brief, it is this: The Mexicans from southern California were wont to make raids into this valley and drive away the ponies of the Indians. Armed with superior weapons, they could defy the Indians. Driven to desperation, the natives resolved to offer battle, and, if possible, drive the marauders from the valley, otherwise to crush them. Learning this, the Mexicans came in larger numbers, prepared for the trial of strength. The opposing forces met in the valley at the base of the hill. The Indians, terrified at the Mexican weapons and the slaughter among their numbers, fled to the top of the hill. There, crouching behind the many rock ledges, they made a last desperate but ineffectual stand. Soon the Mexicans gained the crest, when disorder again prevailed among the Indians, large numbers falling at each volley from their enemy. Only the more cowardly escaped, the real warriors dying amid the rock piles, for no quarter was asked or given. It is told that five hundred Indians perished that day at the base and on the summit of the hill, which ever since is known to the Indians as the "Wailing mountain." Passing the hill at night the Indians say that the piteous wailing of the slain can be distinctly heard, hence its name and its dread to all aborigines of the Tulare valley.

NOT HEREDITARY.

You May Get Consumption in Various Ways, But Not by Birth.

The accumulation of evidence is becoming so great that every physician of experience is forced to share the belief of the communicability of consumption. There are also few physicians who have not had one or more cases that for years they had thought had been contracted in this way, writes Dr. Chappell, in the North American Review. How else than by communication are we to account for the rapid spread of consumption amongst savage nations, where this disease was unknown before civilized people began to visit them? This is true of our own American Indians, the inhabitants of Central Africa and many other countries. Intermarrying or any other condition which might make hereditary transmission a possible cause certainly could not account for its rapid progress. Besides, some of the best observers and investigators believe that consumption is not hereditary, and there is much positive evidence in favor of this view. With such evidence of the possibility of inhaling the bacilli the question would naturally be asked: How do the bacilli get into the atmosphere when they are not found in the breath of sufferers of this disease? We know positively that in these cases bacilli are present in the mucus which is raised after coughing. In its moist condition it is impossible for it to be inhaled, but when it dries and becomes dust it is blown about, and it is in this form that it becomes dangerous.

The Morality of Athens.

The city in Europe which makes the best showing, so far as morality is concerned, is Athens. Within the memory of the present generation, there has been no single matrimonial scandal that has taken place in the society of the Grecian metropolis, and the latter is about the only capital in the world which is absolutely without any chronique scandaleuse. The Athenians marry young and remain faithful to their marriage vows. This is not alone on account of principle, but is also attributable in a measure to the almost entire absence of the demi monde. What little there is of the latter in Athens is exclusively of foreign origin.

PICTURESQUE ABUSE.

An Irish Orator Who Became Decidedly Personal in His Remarks.

Congressmen "before the war" were somewhat accustomed to the exchange of unparliamentary language, but perhaps no American legislators were ever so practiced in vituperation as the members of the much-lamented, vanished Irish parliament on College green. Somehow they contrive to keep on friendly private terms while treating one another to most picturesque abuse.

On one occasion, says the Chicago News, pointing a quivering finger across the house at his opponent, one Thaddy Burke concluded with these words:

"And every mimber of the honorable gintleman's famille is benayth contimpt—from the white-lived hound that is shivering on the flure to the painted hag that is grinning in the gallery."

"How did you know that his sister was in the gallery?" whispered a comrade as the orator sat down.

"Shure, didn't Thaddy himself tell me she was going to be prisint when we were coming down to the house after dinner?"

No English Gooseberries Here.

What is called the English gooseberry in this country is not such, but a hybrid. The English gooseberry will not thrive in this part of America, for no sooner does the berry begin to form than a mildew appears upon it, and only by the constant application of lime and sulphur can the crop be brought to perfection. The climate is too hot for the English gooseberry, and even in the shade the berries often "scale" and fall off. That which is called the English gooseberry is a graft upon the native stock, having all the hardiness of the native wild berry and the delicious taste of the English.

NATURE'S MUSEUM.

Skeletons of Strange Creatures Found in the Earth.

A Place in Oregon Which Is a Veritable Burying Ground of Birds and Animals Now Extinct—A Valuable Discovery.

A party of explorers who have been spending the entire year in the mountains south of here, says a [illegible] (Ore.) correspondent of the San Francisco Chronicle, have just come [illegible] until the snow [illegible] spring. These gentlemen have been sent out by a museum [illegible] search for fossils, and [illegible] [illegible] found [illegible] [illegible] animals and birds [illegible] [illegible]. The [illegible] found over one thousand [illegible] fossils [illegible] in classifying [illegible] for shipment.

It [illegible] by paleontologists [illegible] fossil [illegible] [illegible] a perfect [illegible] the [illegible] as the [illegible] desert [illegible] desert is a small lake [illegible] This lake is in the [illegible] which for wild desolation [illegible] picturesqueness has not its equal [illegible] in the world. To the [illegible] east stretch the barren [illegible] of the desert, while [illegible] northward rise the desolate [illegible] the Warner [illegible] mountains. [illegible] finding of the [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] hard to find.

It was in this desert that the [illegible] made their head [illegible] years [illegible] to light the [illegible] world [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] birds have been [illegible] ries, and [illegible] the [illegible] pounded [illegible] from one bone [illegible] mals. In [illegible] stones of the desert [illegible] bones. [illegible] collection of wild [illegible] ever visited the [illegible] about the shores of [illegible] are bones of [illegible] makes it evident that [illegible] once [illegible] and barren. Bones of [illegible] were there, and [illegible] of camel, the [illegible] deer, llama, [illegible] as big as oxen, with [illegible] species of wolf [illegible] seven specimens of [illegible] of animals were found [illegible] with the bones were [illegible] heads which had been [illegible] volcanic glass [illegible].

It is an evident fact [illegible] was here when some of [illegible] animals lived, for there was [illegible] bedded in the thick [illegible] an arrowhead made out of the [illegible] glass. The [illegible] are found [illegible] men of the country [illegible] but until research was made it [illegible] posed that the remains were [illegible] recent animals.

ARTIFICIAL PARASITISM.

Cranky People Who Are [illegible] Imaginary Creatures.

"Cranks bother us [illegible]" Entomologist Howard, of the [illegible] ment of agriculture, to a [illegible] Star writer. "A man down [illegible] recently sent us word that [illegible] great distress of mind. While [illegible] bathing in the ocean a [illegible] centipede had got into his [illegible] withstanding the utmost [illegible] by physicians whom he had [illegible] the creature still remained [illegible] occasioned him the most [illegible] agony, clawing at the drum of [illegible] and the delicate membranes [illegible] passages.

"This was very unpleasant [illegible] and it had finally occurred [illegible] the bureau of entomology of [illegible] ton might suggest a remedy. [illegible] he said, the centipede had [illegible] shed legs, a number of which [illegible] preserved. Unless he obtained [illegible] he said he was convinced that [illegible] soon go crazy.

"We wrote to him, saying that [illegible] would be glad if he would send [illegible] of the legs which the centipede was [illegible] leged to have shed. He responded [illegible] sending us a few particles of skin [illegible] dozen or so of such small hairs as [illegible] within the external opening of the [illegible] Among these specimens there was [illegible] to be found any sign of legs of any [illegible] sect or other creature. It was [illegible] had supposed, the man's complaint [illegible] simply imaginary.

"A similar case occurred not long [illegible] in which the sufferer was an [illegible] gentleman living abroad, who [illegible] sent to him from this country copies [illegible] certain American newspapers [illegible] wrote that these publications [illegible] dently carried with them [illegible] the mails some dreadful [illegible] which had attacked him and [illegible] ing him the utmost misery. [illegible] who had been called in had [illegible] that there was nothing the [illegible] ing evidently ignorant of this [illegible] kind of imported parasites. [illegible] quest he sent to us an exhibit [illegible] proved to be only a little [illegible] might be scratched from the [illegible] healthy person. Of course it was [illegible] ly a delusion.

"This is a very peculiar form [illegible] lusion, and it is not altogether [illegible] mon. It has been called by the [illegible] brated Dr. Blanchard, of Paris [illegible] parasitism.' Victims of it imagine [illegible] they are attacked by parasites [illegible] ous kinds and suffer all [illegible] which imagination equally with [illegible] physical torture can inflict."

KINGLY OCCUPATIONS.

Although They Govern Monarchs Have Some Diversion.

Kings are supposed to govern like other men, some of them have passionately fond of some commonplace employment. Here are [illegible] of the most curious:

Briantes, king of Lydia, was [illegible] adept at filing needles, whilst [illegible] one of the kings of Macedonia spent [illegible] greater part of his time in making [illegible] ous kinds of lanterns.

To come nearer home, says London Tid-Bits, George III. gave but little [illegible] and attention to the science of [illegible] ing, but spent every moment he [illegible] snatch in turning. He had fitted [illegible] for his own use, in the gardens of [illegible] palace at Kew, a workshop [illegible] whence he was often brought [illegible] keeping a cabinet council waiting [illegible] hours. Poor Louis XIV., of France, [illegible] spent most of his time in making [illegible] One trade, that of watch and [illegible] making, has had two royal [illegible] Leopold II. and Charles V. were [illegible] very fond of making and mending [illegible] timekeepers of their [illegible] strangest of all occupations for [illegible] was that of Hareatius, king of Persia, [illegible] who spent his time in catching [illegible] He was considered the most expert [illegible] catcher in his kingdom.
